

Occupational Health and Industrial Medicine. A new monthly abstract journal from Excerpta Medica containing 4,500 abstracts in 1971.

Approximately 3,200 of the world's leading biomedical serials serve as the source material for Excerpta Medica's range of 39 abstract journals, including Occupational Health and Industrial Medicine. Each of these speciality journals brings together, in English, in a single, up-to-date reference work, material from periodicals devoted to the pertinent speciality as well as relevant information appearing in general medical journals and publications dealing with other biomedical disciplines.

Original articles are carefully selected, evaluated, classified, abstracted and indexed by practising specialists whose professional qualifications are similar to those of the original authors. Thus the scientific significance of the original material is preserved without distortion.

Each issue of Occupational Health and Industrial Medicine contains a computer processed, thesaurus-controlled, subject index and an index of authors, both of which are cumulated annually and published in a separate issue. Subject indexing terms are based on the content of the original article.
